

*This is the Yellow Crocus on the first day of Spring here in Michigan..... 65° and sun.
Yesterday was bitter cold, and tomorrow snow is predicted.*

Crocus are native to the Alps, southern Europe, and the Mediterranean area and grow in a wide range of habitats, including woodland, scrub and meadows. The name derives from Greek 'krokos,' a Semitic loanword (Hebrew 'karkom,' Aramaic 'kurkama,' Persian and Arabic 'kurkum', all meaning saffron or saffron yellow).

Yellow Crocus

Offers gusto, drive and exuberance for new beginnings

Yellow Crocus is the essence for new beginnings, fresh starts,
new joy after the trials of Winter have left us.
It offers us energy and helps us to emerge playfully from the introspection of the dark cold months of Winter.

Crocus is a little flower with clear determination to emerge as the first flower in Spring's energetic marathon.
So
Crocus has the ability to impart to humans this quality of gusto, drive, and exuberance.
To look at a Crocus
is to smile,
to say yes to life,
to feel a joy and anticipation of the goodness of all life in its renewal.
Crocus essence
can give us the pluck
to give it a go
and to smile brightly back as we express our own inner Sun and emerge from the darkness anew.
